POLITICAL NOTES,

—Col. A. K. McClure is lecturing in the eastern part of State.

—The Portuguese Government has ordered all Carlists from its territory.

—Gov. Hartranft is to be present at the army reunion in Hartfort, Con.

—The Pennsylvania Democratic papers object to free trade as the corner stone of their party.

—Josephus Yeakle, of the Manayunk Sentinel, announces himself for Representative for the 16th District.

—The Republican State Central Committee met in Harrisburg, on Friday last, and decided to hold the State Convention on Wednesday, the 13th day of August in Harrisburg.

—The public debt statement for April shows a reduction of the total during the month of $2,247,485,60. Mr. Richardson opens his career as Secretary auspiciously.

—Under a recent act of Congress retiring naval officers at the age of 62 years, four rear admirals will be retired this year, namely: George F. Emmons in August, Charles, Steadman in September, William Rodgers Taylor in November, and Thornton A. Jenkins in December.

—The Harrisburg Journal is authorized to say that Mr. Thomas V. Coopor, of Delaware county, is a candidate for State Senator; the Beaver Radical and Pittsbutgh Commercial are therefore mistaken in stating that he is a candidate for Congress. Mr. Cooper is a man of unimpeachable integrity.

—The aggregate amount paid into the United States Treasury up to May 5, by 27 members of Congress, it being their return of extra compensation, is $111,000.97, including the check received this morning from Secretary Gorham, on account of Senator Sumner, for $4,445 60.

—The Pennsylvania Reserve Corps will hold their annual re-union on the 15th of May, at Gettysburg. The Philadelphia members have already made arrangements and will pass through Columbia. Gov. Curtin, Hon. Wm. B. Mann and other dignitaries will be there.

—At Venna all the departments of the exposition, save that of the United States, are rapidly filling up, and the great show in a few days will be complete in all save the features in which America was to have been represented. It is said our countrymen at Vienna are indignant at this state of affairs. If they were not they would deserve expatriation,

—Ohio legislators are presumably honest men or they would not have hastened to declare in such strong terms and by so large a vote their indignation at the action of the members of Congress in voting themselves the "back pay." Apropos of this matter, Senator Summer's note returning his share of this money is the simplest, and therefore the most honest, that has yet been writen.

—The Boston Journal says: Secretary Richardson's system is a medium between the reform hitherto proposed and the old political way of making appointments. At the first glance this seems like an attempt to mix oil and water; but Secretary Richardson is an ingenious man, and, what is better, he is an experienced man in everything that relates to the departmental service of the Government, and is sure to reach the desideratum, if anybody can.

—The pension laws as amended by the last Congress will give increase pension to widows having one child. The amount of increase is two dollars per month. And has not been allowed heretofore except where there was more than one child. Many claims are now being filed under the new law, and the question to be decided is whether the increase is to date back from July 22, 1866, the date of the original act increasing the widows, pensions, or from the date of the modified law last session.

HOW TO DO IT.

What would be thought of a sailor who would favor the destruction of a ship because a few barnacles clung to its bottom? He would be accounted crazy, and a fit subject for an asylum. Yet there are some persons who favor the destruction of the Republican party because a few knaves have clung to its fortunes, and have found a living under its shadow. Can we believe them to be sound in their judgment or safe in their advice? We fear not. Like the crazy sailor, the remedy they propose is worse than the disease.

It is a little singular that every man who leaves his party thinks that he was the last man of virtue in it; and that his departure left it in a worse plight than was Sodom of old. We assure our Democratic friends that we have a good stock of honesty still left in our party, and can spare a few more of just such men as went out under the liberal flag, and still keep out of moral bankruptcy. We are daily purifying our party, by bringing into it the honest material that was accidentally left in the Democratic camp, and by driving out the black sheep from our own fold as soon as we are sure of the color of the fleece. But we are not prepared to destroy the best political party the world has yet seen to get rid of a few barnacles that have fastened upon it. There is a way to break their hold, and that is to destroy them whenever we can get at them. We should overhaul the good old ship at every election, and remove with a strong arm everything that tends to impede its progress in the great work of human civillization. Our party, from the beginning of its power, has been the great lever of reform. It has secured reforms in our Government which might well have been the work of a century instead of the labor of less than a score of years. It has taken no step backward. What it has gained it has kept, and is continually improving. It has proven by its works that it is something nobler than a mere party; it is the spirit of the Republic working out through its best representatives the great problem of self-government.

HONEST JOURNALISM.—We admire honesty wherever found. It is so rarely met in party papers that when we note it we are glad to give it due credit. We refer to genuine honesty of criticism not that sickly sentimentalism which affects it without possessing any of its attributes. We are suspicious of the journal that is continually proclaiming its honesty and the dishonesty of every other particularly those within the area of its own circulation, that is always filled with blackguardism, slander, falsehood and mean abuse of everything that emimates from a Republican administration and not one word of honesty criticism or patriotic desire to protect and advance the interests of the nation—fail even to come within the shadow of honest journalism. The democratic journals of Centre County, and all over the country in fact, weekly prate about the corruption of the Republican party filling their columns with vile-abuse and slander and failing to substantiate their accusations of corruption except by their own doubtful testimony. Every silly pretence is seized and enlarged upon until it requires an expert to recognize the first cause of which it is the offspring. No more gratfying evidence comes to us of the purity and honesty of the present administration than these very flimsy pretences out of which the democratic journals are compelled to make their mountains of damning evidence.

RECENT advices from New Orleans represent affairs to be in a more favorable condition. The knowledge that United States Deputy Marshals, each backed by a strong posse of military, have left New Orleans to make arrests, has caused several organizations of McEneryites to disband and scatter. The dispatch adds that General Emory appears sanguine now that by aid of the troops he will be able to prevent any organised outbreaks or conflict between the two contending factions.

DEATH OF CHIEF JUSTICE CHASE.

Chief Justice Salmon Portland Chase died at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. William Hoyt, No. 4 West Thirty-second street, New York, on Tuesday, May 6, from an attack of apoplexy.

Mr. Chase was born at Cornish, New Hampshire, in the year 1808, where he lived a few years, when his father moved to Keene, N. H., where he died leaving young Chase at the age of ten or twelve to the care of his uncle, the Rev. Philander Chase, then residing at Cincinnati, Ohio. He studied law in the law office of Mr. Wirt, then Attorney General under President John Quincy Adams, and commenced practice in Cincinnati in 1829 or 1830.

His first vote for President was cast in 1832 for William Wirt, his old patron and preceptor. At this time he was not committed very warmly to either political party of the day, and voted for Mr. Wirt out of personal friendship. He was first fully identified with the anti-slavery party by his support of Birney for the Presidency in 1844, but finally became allied to the Democracy, and was quite an active member, although retaining his deep and immovable apathy to the "peculiar institutions" of which it was the bulwark.

As a Democrat he took sides with the party in favor of the sub-treasury, which with "hard money" ideas constituted the important features of Democratic policy in those days.

In 1849 the Legislature of Ohio came to a dead lock in the attempt to elect a United States Senator. The Whigs and Democrats were equally divided, while two Free-Soilers held the balance of power. Mr. Chase was the candidate of one of these. After a long struggle he succeeded in winning over the other Free Soiler, when a compact was made with the Democrats, by which they were given the organization of the House, and Mr. Chase the United States Senatorship, the two Free Soilers and all the Democrats voting for him. He was at the time in full harmony with the Democrats on all issues except that pertaining to the extension of slavery, was not an urgent advocate of its abolition at the time of his election to the Senate, believing that Congress had no right to interfere concerning a matter which belonged exclusively to the jurisdiction of the States individually. He was, however, opposed to the repeal of the Missouri Compromise. During the early portion of his career in the Senate, therefore, he voted steadily with the Democracy on all measures not affecting the question of slavery.

The nomination of Franklin Pierce for the Presidency, and the approval of the compromise of 1850, by the Democratic convention at Baltimore, in 1852, was the signal for Mr. Chase's withdrawal from the Ohio Democracy. He supported John P. Hale for President this year, and prepared the platform which was substantially adopted by the Pittsburgh Independent Democratic convention that nominated Mr. Hale. The straight-out abolitionists had a candidate in the field, but Mr. Chase, adhering to his Democratic and free-soil principles, favored the election of the Pittsburgh nominee. He continued to act with this Independent Democratic party until the Kansas-Nebraska bill began to be agitated. To this bill he was a strenuous and prominent opponent, offering three important amendments, which were severally rejected, and closing his opposition by an earnest protest against it on its final passage. During his Senatorial career, economy in the national finance, as, Pacific railroad by the shortest and best route, the homestead bill, cheap postage, and the provision by the national treasury for defraying the expense of procuring safe navigation of the lakes, as well as the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, all found in Mr. Chase a champion.

In 1854, when Know-Nothingism became a political power, Mr. Chase strongly opposed it. In 1855 the party curiously enough nominated him for Governor, and he was the only man outside the party placed on the ticket. Its object was to draw the strong free-soil element of the Democratic party, and the result was successful. Mr. Chase was elected and served until 1857 when he was re-elected by the regular Republican party, which came into existence in 1856, and carried into its ranks all the elements of opposition to slavery. His nomination by the Republican convention was unanimously, and he was henceforth, for many years, thoroughly identified with the party whose candidate he became. During his services as Governor he suggested and carried through the Legislature many substantial reforms in the local administration of the State.

Early in 1860 he was again elected to represent Ohio in the United States Senate, and took his seat in that body on March 4, 1864.

His financial policy has been severely criticized, but he was certainly successful to the full extent of raising all the money needed to carry on the gigantic military operations of the times, and success in such a crisis is the standard of merit by which the world at large judges the career of a statesman. Whatever may have been the nature and extent of his mistakes, his personal integrity was never called in question.

Secretary Chase resigned his place in the Cabinet on the 30th of June, 1864, being succeeded by the Hon. Hugh McCulloch. Following his resignation came an effort on the part of his friends to secure his nomination for the Presidency, but the country, and especially the Republican party, was in no mood to throw over Mr. Lincoln, and the effort was a signal failure.

Nothwithstanding the personal antagonism which grew out of Mr. Chase's Presidential aspirations, Mr. Lincoln, in October, 1864, appointed him Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, on the death of Chief Justice Taney, and this position he continued te hold up to the time of his death.

During the active discharge of the duties of this exalted station, in which his course was characterized by great dignity, profound learning and strict integrity, Mr. Chase was called upon to fulfill some very important duties. Among these were his administration of the oath of office to Presidents Lincoln and Johnson in 1865, and to President Grant in 1873. He was also called upon to preside in March, 1868, over the Senate sitting as a High Court of Impeacement for the trial of President Johnson. Among the many opinions which he delivered from the bench, his dissent from the views of the majority, in May, 1871, on the constitutionality of the legal-tender acts, was the principal thing which subjected him to severe criticism. He had, however, always been an advocate of "hard money," and supported the legal-tender measures during the war, only because they seemed to him to be absolute necessity of the times.

During the past ten years, he had been in affinity with the Democratic party, and aspired to its nomination for the Presidency, but only to meet the rebuke which he received in 1864.

For three years past the late Chief Justice had been in failing health, and was frequently incapacitated from presiding over the Supreme Court. His death, therefore, although it comes with a sudden shock to the country, was not generally unanticipated.

OAKES AMES.

Oakes Ames died at his Massachusetts home last Wednesday, May 7, in the 69th year of his age. As a business man he managed his affairs with shrewdness and ability, and accumulated an immense fortune, and no doubt did much good in the conduct of the business of the Ames Axe, Shovel and Plow Co.

But of his career in politics, it is better for his fame and memory that little be said. In it has been exemplified not the disinterested patriotism that should characterize our statesmen, but the selfish avarice and self-aggrandizement, which sacrificed his highest trusts to his personal ends, and betrayed the high confidence which had been placed in him. That he was of service in many business matters of the country, in the building of the Pacific Railroad, cannot be doubted; but it could as well been done by some one else and without the direct and indirect briberies with which he accomplished his ends; without the demoralizing scandal of the Credit Mobilier, degrading Congress and casting odium upon many eminent men, doubtless innocent of intentional corruption.

This is the blotted page in the history of Oakes Ames—a career which might and should have added lustre to the record of Congress, but has instead given it a blurred page of corruption and fraud, has failed even in the attempt of making it better for his having been there.

TERRIBLE OUTRAGE

A BOY MURDERED.

On last Thursday, (May 1st), a boy nine or ten years of age, named George Shaum, was sent, by his mother, to Keck's store, at Ridgeview P. O., in Mt. Pleasant township, this county, for groceries. The boy went according to directions, got the goods and was on his way home, when another boy named Timothy Beacon, aged about sixteen, got with him, and when in the woods attacked and beat the boy Shaum to death and after he had killed him he dragged the body off the road and placed it in the fork of a fallen tree, and covered it with leaves.

Mrs. Shaum became very uneasy about her boy, but could hear nothing definite concerning him except that he had been at the store and had been seen on his way home in company with the boy Beacon.

On Friday there were some men in the same woods looking for rail timber, when their attention was called to leaves freshly scrapped together in the fork of a fallen tree; upon examination, they found the dead body of the little boy. His skull had been broken and his breast bone crushed, and otherwise larcerated and bruised.

Suspicion at once rested upon young Beacon, and he was accordingly arrested upon an information. At first he denied it, but subsequently acknowledged that he had killed him and that he had done it with a club. The only question, therefore, will be as to his sanity. He was lodged in jail on last Saturday.—Greensburg Tribune and Herald.

GOV. KELLOGG SHOT AT.

NEW ORLEANS, May 8.—Yesterday evening at half past four, as Gov. Kellogg was coming out of the office of the Morgan Steamship Company, at the corner of Natchez alley and Magazine St., he was accosted by Charles R. Railey, a prominent merchant of this city, who said, "Are you Mr. Kellogg?" Kellogg stared at him but did not answer. Railey then said, "If you are, you are a cowardly, swindling, usurping scoundrel; and if you will stand like a man I will treat you as you deserve." Mr. Kellogg made no answer, but turning preternaturally pale, sprang into his carriage; just at this moment a pistol shot was heard, and Kellogg instantly placed his hands to his head and cried out, "Take me home, I'm shot." The carriage immediately drove off. It was impossible to ascertain who fired the shot. Several people saw the smoke, but no one saw the shooting.

Gov. Kellogg was called upon at his residence last night. The report that he was wounded turns out to have been erroneous; the ball whistled so close to his neck that at the time he thought that he had been struck.

Telegrams received last night state that an artillery fight took place yesterday between the opposing forces near St. Martinsville, in which solid shot and shell were used. Both sides were well under cover, and as far as ascertained, no casualties resulted. It is thought the United States forces will arrive at St. Martinsville to-day, and put a stop to hostilities. There was considerable excitement in the city last night.

NEWSPAPORIAL.—The Daily Register, Williamsport, was enlarged on Thursday, May 8.—This looks thrifty. The Register has been rather meagre in its reading matter for some time past owing to its extensive advertising patronage; but now promise to do justice to both readers and advertisers. Gentlemen, we wish you success.

——A rich treat is in store for the lecture-going public, of which we would tell them. By invitation of the President of the Agricultural College, Rev. C. T. Steck, of Hughesville, Lycoming county, lectured before the college community on last Saturday night, and gave them a discourse which has received the unqualified commendation of all who heard it. The subject chosen was "Horace Greeley as a Hero." It was not treated in a partisan method; but on the contrary was made to yield many lessons of deep importance which were presented in a most excellent manner. Mr. Steck proved himself an elocutionist of moral power and a beautiful as well as instructive speaker. Lecture committees cannot do better than to turn their attention to one so full of promise as the gentleman referred to, and we are sure they will benefit the public, as well as themselves, by securing his services for the coming winter.

—Smith's Island, on the Deleware, opposite Philadelphia, together with the hotels and the dwellings thereon, and the steamboats which ply between the city, will be sold at the Exchange, June 10th.

—A will is registered in Waynesburg which contains the following remarkable clause: "I also give to my beloved wife—one red cow, one three year old colt, and the remainder of the kitchen and house-hold furniture."

—The Pennsylvania Editorial Association will make its next summer excursion, in June, through the coal regions, and R. S. Menamin, the active and energetic Secretary, is making the necessary arrangements.

—A man in Norristown who keeps a grocery and does his own printing, hangs out the following: "Milassiz 1$ dollar a gallin. Old teust Is Ded bad Pay Kild im. all Boys that Cut mi Orning Will be Took Up. Aples bi the Barl."

—At an election held on the 5th inst., the following gentlemen were elected trustees of the Indiana normal school of Pennsylvania, to wit: John Sutton, Silas M. Clark, Samuel M'Cartney, George R. Lewis, Joseph R. Smith, Peter Sutton, Thomas St.Clair, George W. Boadenhamer and George S. Christy.

—A flagman on the Allegheny Valley Rail-road named Samuel Smith, while attempting to get on a train at the foot of Fifteenth street, Pittsburg, last Friday afternoon had his right foot crushed by a locomotive wheel, and made a very narrow escape from being killed.

—The Johnstown Tribune has resurrected him. And old man named Thomas, upwards of eighty years of age, lately walked from his home, in Somerset county, to East Conemaugh, a distance of twenty miles, in about seven hours. He came to visit a sick daughter at the latter place, and started for home the next morning not the least fatigued by his long walk the previous day.

—Catharine township, Blair county, furnishes a sensation in the shape of a case of infanticide. On Monday morning some children playing in the vicinity of Yellow Springs school house, in that township, found the body of an infant in a brook contiguous, and a Coroner's inquest elicited the fact that the infant came to its death by foul play. No clue to the perpetrator of the crime has been found.

—A fire broke out about one o'clock May 3rd in Portland street, Boston, and extended to Causeway street, causing losses as follows: J. T. Keating, planing mill, $30,000; insured for $15,000. W. A. Holmes, grocer, $10,000; insured E. F. Putnam, liquors, $2,500. L. C. Durkee, liquors, $3,000. J. G. Dunham frames, $1,500. Bower's carpenter shop, $5,000. Randall's sawing mill, $9,000 The total loss is estimated at $60,000.

—The Warren Mail relates how the bodies of curiously joined "Japanese twins," preserved in alcohol, were lost by a circus company which exhibited at that place a few days ago, and found by a policeman after the show had departed, all the alcohol having disappeared from the case in which the babies were kept. Warren must have a terribly depraved lot of old soakers, who would thus drink the spirits in which dead babies were preserved.

—Every village and borough in the state is projecting the erection of factories of various kinds. We never knew a period in the history of Pennsylvania when so much money was put into manufacturing business, as is being invested at present. The only danger in these ventures is want of experience in those who are to manage them—lack of the proper knowledge in seeking markets for their products. There are buyers at home for all that we can produce, so that enlarged manufacturing can do no harm to the competition in business.

Poetry.

GONE WITH A HANDSOMER MAN.

JOHN.

I've worked in the field all day, a plowin' the "stony break;"
I've scolded my team till I'm hoarse; I've tramped till my legs are weak;
I've choked a dozen swears (so's not to tell Jane fibs)
When the plow-pint struck a stone, and the handles punched my ribs.

I've put the team in the barn and rubbed their sweated coats;
I've fed 'em on a heap of hay, and half a bushel of oats;
And to see the way they eat makes me like eaten' feel.
And Jane won't say to-night that I don't make out a meal.

Well said! the door is locked! but here she's left the key
Under the step, in a place known only to her and me
I wonder who's dying or dead, that she's hustled off pell mell;
But here on the table's a note, and probably this will tell.

Good God! my wife is gone! My wife has gone astray!
The letter it says: "Good bye, for I am going away;
I've lived with you six months, John, and so far I've been true;
But I'm going away to-day with a handsomer man than you."

A han'somer man than me! Why, that a'n't much to say;
There's han'somer men than me goes by here every day.
There's han'somer men than me—I ain't of the han'some kind;
But a lovin'er man than I was I guess she'll never find.

Curse her! curse her! I say, and give my curses wings!
May the words of love I've spoke be changed to scorpion stings!
Oh, she filled my heart with joy, she emptied my heart of doubts;
And now, with a scratch of the pen, she's let my heart's blood out.

Curse her! curse! say I; she'll sometime rue the day;
She'll sometime learn that hate is a game that two can play;
And long before she dies she'll grieve that she ever was born.
And I'll plow her grave with hate, and seed it down with scorn.

As sure as the world goes on, there'll come a time when she
Will read the devilish heart of that han'somer man than me;
And there'll be a time when he will find, as others do
That she that is false with one can be the same with two.

And when her face grows pale, and when her eyes grow dim,
And when he is tired of her, and she is tired of him,
She'll do what she ought to have done, and cooly count the cost,
And then she'll see things clear and know what she has lost.

And thoughts that are now asleep will wake up in her mind,
And she will mourn and cry for what she's left behind;
And maybe she'll sometimes long for me—for me—but no!
I've blotted her out of my heart, and I will not have it so.

And yet in her girlish heart, there was something or other she had
That fastened a man to her, and wasn't entirely bad;
And she loved me a little, I think, although it didn't last;
But I musn't think of these things—I've buried em in the past.

I'll take my hard words back, nor make a bad matter worse;
She'll have trouble enough, she'll not have my curse;
But I'll live a life so square—and I well know that I can—
That she always will be sorry that she went with that han'somer man.

Ah! here is her kitchen dress! it makes my poor eyes blur.
It seems, when I look at that, as if 'twas holdin' her.
And here are her week-day shoes, and there is her week-day hat,
And yonder her wedding gown; I wonder she didn't take that.

'Twas only this morning she came and called me her "dearest dear,"
And said I was makin' for her a regular paradise here;
Oh God! if you want a man to sense the pain of hell,
Before you pitch him, just keep him in Heaven a spell.

Good-bye! I wish that death had severed us two apart,
You've lost a worshipper here—you've crushed a loving heart.
I'll worship no woman again, but I guess I'll learn to pray,
And kneel as you used to kneel, before you run away.

And if I thought I could bring my words on Heaven to bear,
And if I thought I should have some little influence there,
I would pray that I might be, if it only could be so,
As happy and gay as I was only a half an hour ago.

JANE (entering).

Why, John, what a litter here! you've thrown things all around!
Come, what's the matter now? and what've you lost or found?
And here's my father here, a waitin' for supper, too;
I've been riding with him—he's that han'somer man than you.

Ha! ha! pa, take a seat, while I put the kettle on.
And get things ready for tea, and kiss my dear old John.
Why, John, you look so strange! Come, what has crossed your path?

I was only jokin', you know, I'm willing to take it back.

JOHN (aside).

Well, now, if this ain't a joke, with rather a bitter cream!
It seems as if I'd woke from a mighty ticklish dream,
And I think she "smells a rat," for she smiles at me so queer;
I hope she don't; good Lord! I hope they did not hear,
'Twas one of her practical jokes—she thought I'd understand,
But I'll never break sod again till I get the lay of the land,
But one thing's settled with me—to appreciate Heav'n well,
'Tis good for a man to have some fifteen minutes of hell.

WILL T. CARLETON.

Our Story Teller.

THE MILLER OF SCAWTON DALE.

By the author of 'Gilbert Rugg,' 'Hearth Ghosts.

IN FOUR CHAPTERS.

CHAPTER THIRD.—CONCLUDED.

Mr. Wicketts lived in a substantial farm house further down the Dale, and was well to do in the world, and had daughters who had been to school at Lancaster and when she drew near, Minna perceived that the Misses Wicketts had company, and were having tea under the beach tree on the lawn. The young people all looked so smart and well dressed that poor Minna felt afraid to approach them in her cotton gown. But she remembered that the hay would be spoiled if she did not, and so, like a sensible girl, plucked up her courage, entered the garden, and explained her errand to the farmer.

Amongst the young people was one more gaily dressed, and with a more stylish air, than the rest. Minna had been staring at her for some moments, when she suddenly exclaimed, "Oh, Mr. Wicketts, it's sister Esther!" and she ran away with flushed cheeks to embrace her.

But Miss Esther Ringston seemed more surprised than pleased to see her sister. They were almost strangers now; but Minna's heart throbbed fast, if Esther's did not, at the sight of her own flesh and blood.

"I didn't know—I'm so glad!" she said, sobbing. "I heard once before you had been visiting here, Esther; but this time you'll come and see father before you go, won't you?"

But Esther said she must obey her uncle and aunt's wishes. They had been father and mother to her, and she owed them a daughter's obedience. Esther spoke more correctly than Minna, and looked more like a young lady, for she had been to a boarding school; but Minna was inexpressibly shocked by her coldness, and at last turned away with an aching heart, when she found her pleading all in vain.

She had got a promise, however, that a horse should be lent to get in the hay, and she set off home as fast as she could go, thinking over her sister's conduct.

It was a good two miles back to the mill, and as the sun was getting low, Minna thought to hasten her return by taking a short cut through some fields that belonged to their neighbor Norton. She had forgotten that a certain bull of which she stood much in terror was sometimes pastured in these fields; but the unpleasant fact was recalled to her by an ominous lowing that reached her ear when half way across the second field. Mr. Norton's bull had a disposition as unamiable as his master's, and when Minna beheld the beast careening towards her, tail in air, she very naturally set off running, and reached the next stile almost dead with fright and exhaustion. At the moment when she was ready to sink down and be trampled on, a young man sprang over the stile, and lifted her over it before she well knew what had happened.

"Oh, thank you!" she said as soon as she could speak. "I—I thought I should be kil—killed!" and Minna began to cry.

"It was a close shave, but don't cry. You're safe enough now," said the young man, still threatening the bull with his stick; but the cowardly animal soon turned tail when he saw he had not a defenceless woman to deal with.

"Can you tell whether I am on the right track for Shepton Fell?" asked the young man, who was a stranger to Minna.

"No, you're quite wrong. You have come too far up the dale," she answered, drying her tears.

"I guessed as much when I sat there on the stile just now."

"You must turn back when you get into the road, and when you reach the inn by the bridge, you must ask your way," said Minna.

But when they got into the road, the stranger insisted on seeing her safely home. "You are so upset that if another bull turns up, he'll make quick work of you," he said with a smile.

There was something so frank and pleasant about the young man, that Minna did not feel at all afraid of his company, shy as she generally was of strangers.

As they walked along he put many questions to her about farming, and seemed to take much interest in the scenery; but he neither looked like a Lancashire farmer nor a travelling artist such as Minna had often seen before this in the Dale, and he spoke with an accent that was so new to her that she almost laughed. Upon his remarking that they did'nt get in their hay-crops in that fashion in his own country, Minna said:

"But you're an Englishman, aren't you?"

"No," said he, "I'm from Canada," and he went on to tell her so many interesting things about his own country, that Minna was quite surprised when she saw her home in sight.

As they turned the bend of the stream and beheld the mill and the home before them, the last rays of the setting sun were shining down the Dale. Nothing could look more charming than the view from this point. The stranger stopped in admiration, but it was admiration mingled with amazement.

"How queer!" said he. "I could swear I have seen this place before, and in this very same sunlight."

"Perhaps you've passed up the Dale before," said Minna.

"Never in my life. I set foot in England for the first time last Tuesday, and have been chiefly in Liverpool since. I suppose I must have dreamed of some such place, one time or other, for it seems as familiar to me as our own homestead."

Minna was thinking more of how she could prevent her companion accompanying her further than of his words. The sight of a stranger would displease her father, she knew, and to let him go to the door and not ask him in would be downright uncivil after the service he had rendered her. But before she could make up her mind what to do, the young man cut the difficulty by saying—

"I'm going to ask you for something to drink. I'm so thirsty with the heat that I nearly stopped to take a draught out of your brook just now."

Minna reddened visibly. There was nothing in the house but milk or cold tea she knew. To refuse it, however, was impossible, though she already saw her father standing there in the doorway, looking on in wonder.

"Who's this?" he asked with an air of displeasure as they approached. Minna explained, and related the story of her fright.

"You ought not to have crossed—you oughtn't to have set foot on Norton's land at all," said her father; and his tone was so churlish and his face wore such an habitual frown now-a-days that the young Canadian set him down for a brute, and pitied the poor girl who had such a father.

Minna hastened into the house for the milk; the young man stood at the door wondering why he was not asked indoors. Being a bit of a wag in his way, and very plain spoken, he remarked—

"Well, miller, are times so bad with you in this country, that you can't afford to offer a seat to a stranger for fear of wearing out your chair-bottoms?"

"I don't ask strangers within my doors, answered the miller grimly; "they're better outside—better and safer."

"That's social, anyhow," began the young man, but he checked himself, for there stood Minna with the milk.

When he had drank it off the miller, looking at him sternly, said—

"Now, young man, go on your way. That milk was given you, remember, by my daughter. She doesn't look like a murderess, does she? No; but if I had given it you, they'd tell you down in the Dale that it was lucky for you if you wasn't a dead man afore morning;" and he closed the door in the young man's face without another word.

"A pretty specimen of British manners," thought the young Canadian, as he turned away. "The man's mad, I suppose. How unhappy that pretty girl looked, as her father shut the door on me."

Minna Ringston's face haunted him all the way back to the little inn by the bridge, where, as it was now getting dark, he decided to stay the night, instead of passing on to Shepton. Whilst at supper he made some inquiries of the landlord about the miller of Scawton. So strange a story did he hear that he was unable to sleep when he went to bed. He lay thinking it over, wondering how he came to have that strange feeling of being familiar with a place which it was quite impossible he could have ever seen before. All at once it flashed upon him that there hung upon the parlor wall in his father's house, near Montreal, a picture representing the place just as he had seen it that evening. But he was too tired to pursue the train of thought he had started, and fell asleep immediately.

A few days later, as Minna Ringston was making bread in the kitchen, there came a clink at the garden-gate. But Minna was too busy to heed it, and too much engrossed by sad thoughts. All had gone wrong the last few days. Trusty was dead, and the hay not got in. Her father had refused the loan of his neighbor's horse, and had been very angry with his daughter for asking it. The weather had broken up, heavy thunder storms succeeded, and the hay was now lying rotting in the field. Minna's sorrowful ruminations were interrupted by a tap on the window-pane, and looking up she beheld, to her surprise, the young Canadian standing at the open casement, watching her with a smile.

"We don't do it in that way at home," said he. "I'd like you to taste my mother's doughnuts and buckwheat cake; they beat your bread into fits. Don't be alarmed," said he, walking in. "Your father is asleep in the arbor yonder. I have been watching my time I want a few words with you, Miss Ringston, if you won't think it a liberty I'm taking."

"Oh, no; please sit down," said Minna. "I hoped I might see you again, to tell you—to ask you to not be offended at poor father's behavior the other night. He—he can't help it," she stammered, "and I'm sure he's grateful to you; but—but—oh, you don't know what he's suffered!" and Minna's voice shook sadly as she looked up at her visitor.

"I know more than you think, I guess," he replied, looking closely into Minna's pretty blue eyes. "Your Dale folks don't want bribing to talk about their neighbor's concerns. But I want you to come to the business that brings me to-day, and that is to put a few questions to you, Miss Ringston, if you'll kindly answer them."

Minna had no hesitation about complying. The honest voice of the speaker, to say nothing of his comely face, inspired her with confidence. They stood talking together for some time; and the various emotions written on Minna's open countenance made her look unusually animated and interested.

"I must be off," said the Canadian, as the kitchen clock struck three. "I have to be back in Liverpool to-morrow, and, as my business will be finished in a couple of days, I shall probably be on my way home before the week's out. If I have the good luck to serve you, Miss Ringston, I shall be well paid for the loss of the ramble I had promised myself amongst the Cumberland lakes. In any case you shall hear from me one of these days about this matter, which ought not to rest here. Good-bye—never mind the flour on your fingers;" and Minna, blushing prettily, gave him her hand, which he pressed quite cordially.

He had not been gone a minute before he re-appeared at the window.

"By the way, you don't know my name—John Lockwood, dealer in hides, Montreal—don't forget—and God bless you,"

The next moment he had cleared the garden hedge at a bound, and was hastening down the Dale.

CHAPTER FOURTH—SNOWED UP.

Minna Ringston was not likely to forget her cheery friend, whose visit had excited such hopes in her mind; but when month after month went by, and nothing came of John Lockwood's promised assistance, she began to feel discouraged and disappointed in him. He had written her one brief letter, expressing a fear that he had roused hopes which might never be realized—that was all. Often did poor Minna cast a sorrowful eye over the lines, and blamed herself for having put any trust in the writer's words.

"But I think he would be sorry if he could see us now," reflected Minna, with pathetic naivete, as she sat watching the snow-flakes fall this howling winter's afternoon; and in counting upon his sympathy she was not crediting Mr. Lockwood with any excessive sensibility, for things were just now at a desperate pass with the family at Scawton Mill.

Christopher Ringston was ill, and Minna was sitting by her father's bedside with a heavy heart. He looked old and grizzled as he gazed at his daughter, who held a letter in her hand which she had just been reading to him. Christopher's brow had darkened as he listened; he could not yet realize the contents of that heartless epistle.

Outside the house a heavy snow storm raged. It was mid winter, and the mill-wheel stood locked in ice, and the sheep were dying in the drifts on the Fells, and there had been neither ingress nor egress from the Dale for now five days past.

"I think, father," began Minna, hesitatingly, as she looked wofully at the letter—"I think Esther would have come if the snow hadn't—"

"It didn't snow when you wrote to her," he interrupted angrily. "Say no more but read it again as I bid you."

Minna unfolded the letter again (it was written on genteel note-paper in a beautiful hand), and read as follows:

"MY DEAR MINNA: I was very sorry to hear such sad news from you, and hope this will find my father improving. My aunt begs me to say that she cannot think of allowing me to come over to the Dale until warmer weather sets in, and Mr. Parsons also thinks it would be imprudent. I am afraid you have a deal on your hands, but as my father refuses the help and even the advice of his friends, I don't see what can be done. If anything should happen—I mean if father should sink—you must let me know at once; of course I should put off being married until the spring in that case, though what Mr. Parsons would say, I don't know. He has taken a house, and we are busy furnishing it. Believe me, dear Minna, your affectionate sister,

"ESTHER RINGSTON."

"That will do," said the miller slowly; and he turned away his head and spoke no more.

It was a strange illness that had come upon Ringston—a complete breaking down of the moral as well as the physical forces of the man.

"It's o' no use strivin', my lass," said he, when he took to his bed a week before; "it's clear to me that when the world takes agen a man, he can't prosper nohow, let him try as he will. If it wasn,t for thee, I'd never wish to rise off this bed never more."

It was true; he had utterly lost heart. His neighbors regarded his latest misfortune (the failure of his potato crop and the distemper amongst his cattle) as plain and visible proofs of Divine displeasure. When Anot Jennings heard of Christopher's illness, she was so concerned for his guilty soul that she sent over her cousin, the minister, to talk to him and awaken his slumbering conscience. But Christopher's brow turned dark as night at the sight of him; and he peremptorily ordered him to quit the chamber and the house, when he learned by whom he had been sent.

Well might poor Minna's spirits flag as they had done of late. Even the doctor, whom she secretly consulted about her father's illness, had hinted it was the mind more than the body which needed medicine in his case. It seemed to her that all the world, excepting herself, still suspected her father of that dreadful crime.

Except herself? Alas! what most distresses the poor girl was that there had been moments of late when she found doubts of her father's innocence rising in her own mind. "How was it that Walter Soams had never been heard of again? How was it that the steps taken to trace him by the police of London and of Liverpool had entirely failed? Could it be possible the world was right, and her father had been tempted—" But arriving thus far in her speculations, Minna would always stop, horrified at her wickedness.

If innocent, her father was the most wronged of men, and her warmest love and devotion could make but poor amends for the injustice of his lot.

Never, perhaps, had Minna's spirits sunk so low as during the last five days, while she had been shut up in the house with her father and old Simon. All communication with the lower part of the Dale had been cut off since Saturday, when Simon, returning from the village shop at the bridge, had nearly lost his life in a snow-drift. The severe weather, the exclusion, and the depressing influence of the cold had told upon them all. Her father had lain in bed in a half-torpid state, looking out on the landscape with a face as dull and hopeless as the winter sky. Old Simon croaked over his rheumatics by the fireside, and said "he thought them as was happed down warm in the churchyard has the best of it this winter." When Minna was getting his supper ready at night, the old man seemed more depressed than usual.

"It's like the winter when your grand father, the old master, shot the wild geese at the Dale-head," said he, "and we was snowed up a fortnight; only then," added he with a sigh, "we had a houseful o' good victuals, and we tapped three casks o' strong ale afore the thaw set in, I recollecks."

When he had smoked his pipe, he laid it down on the mantel-shelf, and said solemnly, "There, missie, it's the last o' the baccy, and we will come to the last mouthful o' victuals soon. I think the Lord has clean forgotten us here." And when the old man had hobbled off to bed, Minna sat down before the kitchen fire and cried from sheer misery.

Alas! if the food should not hold out as long as the frost! If her father should grow worse and die before any aid could be summoned! He had seemed more low-spirited that day than ever, and at times she thought his mind was wandering. She had resolved not to leave him to night and wrapping her self in a shawl, she returned to her father's room, to spend the time in the chair by his bed-side.

"Ay, my poor lass!" said he, looking at her sadly, "Iv'e been thinking what will become of thee when I'm gone. You'll never let them change your heart against me, as they've changed your sister's—eh?"

"Oh, Father, how can you talk so—" But Minna's tears choked her.

"Nay, lassie, don't take on. I know thou'rt true to me, if none else be. But—" here he paused—"but it's hard to leave a bad name behind one. I'd hoped to stand clear before them; there's no justice on this earth—no, nor yonder above, it seems."

The last words were spoken in a voice that made Minna shudder.

"Try and sleep a bit, father dear," she murmured.

He closed his eyes, and lay back on the pillow with a sigh; but it was long ere he slept, and when he did sleep it was so uneasily, that Minna resolved to keep awake all night, if possible. For some two hours she sat there listening to the ticking of her father's big silver watch; but ere long Minna's youth and healthy temperament asserted themselves, and she too slept. She woke up suddenly, hearing her father call her—

"Minna, who's grinding in the mill to-night?"

"Grinding, father? You're dreaming," said she. "It's night, and the weir's frozen."

"I heard the mill door click," said he "and the hopper bell ring. Hark!"

But there was no sound in the silence that rested on the snowy earth. Minna drew back the window curtain to reassure her father, and showed him the snow-covered trees and the old mill standing out black and grim against the white landscape.

"All's safe, father," said she, it was only fancy; and she took her seat by the bedside, and held her father's hand in hers till he slept again.

But there was no more sleep for Minna. She had been too much startled by her father's strange words, and she sat listening for something in a state of nervous expectation. Now Minna Ringston was neither stupid nor superstitious by nature, but her fataer's condition, the silence of the night, the solitary household where she alone was awake—all combined to fill her with disquiet. So much was she under the influence of nervous excitement that ere long she began to think she could really hear some one in the mill. Whether it was a door that had creaked or a footfall on the hollow planks, she could not tell, but she sat listening for repetition of the sound with a painful concentrated attention. At last, unable to sit still any longer, she rose and went to the window.

Brave girl as she was, Minna Ringston with difficulty restrained a cry of terror, when she beheld a light streaming from one of the lower windows of the mill. People had long said the place was haunted; perhaps there was— But Minna's heart almost stopped beating at the thought. She was literally too frightened to move for a few minutes; but then came the reflection that ther might be thelves in the mill, or it might have taken fire. In any case she must know the worst.

Bracing her courage, she took the rusty keys from the fire-place, and drawing her shawl over her head, she quitted the room silently so as not to awaken her father. She had resolved to cross the gallery that led to the upper chamber of the mill and there look down through the trap-ddoor in the floor into the grinding-room, whence the mysterious light issued.

She had reached the mill door, when her courage failed her. The thick snow had deadened the sound of her footstept on the bridge: but how was she to unlock the door without being heard? She stood with key in the lock, her heart beating wildly, when the door noiselessly gave way. Simon had forgotten to fasten it, or had ceased to do so since the granery was empty. It was all in darkness save where a light streamed through a square aperture in the floor. With stealthy steps she approached, and looking down through the trap-door, stood paralyzed with terror,

There were two figures below—two men, muffled up to the eyes, talking together in a low tone. One of them grasped a thick cudgel or staff; the other held aloft a flaring candle, which he had taken from the lantern on the wall. Minna heard the latter say—

"If we haven't awoke them in the house, we'd better keep quiet awhile."

To which the other replied—

"Yes, we should stand a chance of a bullet in the head, I dare say, if we tried the house. The miller wouldn't stand on ceremony at this time of the night. Hark, what's that?"

It was Minna, who in her terror, had let the keys slip from her fingers.

"Rats, I suppose—old place full of them—hark! how they scamper," and a providential rush of mice and rats at that moment saved Minna from fainting on the spot.

"I know every corner of the old place," said the first speaker, still holding his light aloft. "It looks as grim as a vault, and if ever a ghost could choose his own—"

"If you go waving the light about in that fashion, you'll draw their attention at the house, and frightben them to death," interrupted his companion. "I wonder what time it is; nowhere near morning, I'm afraid. If I haven't lost my pipe in those confounded drifts. I shall have a smoke, and—. Good heavens Soames, look there!"

The speaker had just caught sight of the terrified face looking down through the trap-door. With a haste that almost knocked his companion backward, he sprang up the ladder that led to the next floor.

"Minna, don't be frightened!" he cried; "it's I—it's John Lockwood! All's right; and you mustn't—you mustn't—"

For Minna, who had never shown signs of hysterics in her life, gave a piercing cry, and was on the point of fainting when he caught her in his arms. But she had taken in the meaning of the scene, and before the young man had time to get out his brandy flask, she had revived and had extricated herself from his arms.

"Oh, Mr. Lockwood, is it true?" she cried, "have you really brought him back?"

She pointed to his companion, a dark-bearded man, who stood looking on with an air of distress.

"Yes, that's Walter Soames," said I would find him, and I have. But I did n

Youth's Department.

THE BATTLE OF LIFE.

Go forth to the battle of life, my boy,
  Go while it is called to-day;
For the years go out, and the years come in,
Regardless of those who may lose or win—
  Of those who may work or play.

And the troops march steadily on,
  To the army gone before;
You may hear the sound of their falling feet,
Going down to the river where the two worlds meet;
  They go to return no more.

There is room for you in the ranks,
  And duty, too, assigned;
Step into the front with a cheerful grace—
Be quick, or another may take your place,
  And you may be left behind.

There is work to do by the way,
  That you never can tread again;
Work for the loftiest, lowliest men—
Work for the plough, adze, spindle and pen;
  Work for the hands and the brain.

The serpent will follow your steps,
  To lay for your feet a snare;
And pleasure sit in her fairy bowers,
With garlands of poppies and lotus flowers;
  Bewreathing her golden hair.

Temptations will wait by the way,
  Temptations without and within;
And spirits of evil, in robes as fair
As the loftiest angels in heaven wear,
  Will lure you to deadly sin.

Then put on the armor of God,
  In the beautiful days of youth;
Put on the helmet, breast-plate and shield,
And the sword that the feeblest arm may wield
  In the cause of right and truth—

And go to the battle of life, my boy,
  With the peace of the Gospel shod,
And, before high Heaven do the best you can
For the great reward, for the good of man,
  For the kingdom and crown of God.

—LITTLE SOWER.

Ferdinand's Tooth.

Ferdinand sat in his high chair, with a very sober look on his face. He had just made a discovery. One of his front teeth "wiggled," He was thinking about that, and wondering if his mother would make him have it pulled if he told her. He had heard that it hurt very much to have a tooth pulled. And he disliked to be hurt. At length he said, "Mother, won't you say nothing if I'll tell you something?"

"You had better tell me," she said, "I don't think I shall eat you up."

Ferdinand slipped down from his high chair and went to her. "I guess that tooth is a little loose," said he, opening his mouth and pointing to the tooth..

"I should think it was," said his mother.

"It looks almost ready to drop out. stand still a minute and I'll take it out for you."

But Ferdinand shut his mouth very decidedly.

"I won't hurt you," she said, taking a piece of sewing-silk from her work-basket.

"I don't want it pulled with thread," said Ferdinand, backing off. I want it pulled with a machine.

The truth is, he didn't want it pulled at all, but he was glad of any excuse.

"Have you finished your breakfast?" asked his mother.

"Yes ma'am," said Ferdinaud.

"Then," said she, "if you will go over to the doctor's and let him take that tooth out, you may stay and play with Granville till noon.

Ferdinand was pleased with that plan, for he and Granville were great friends. Besides, it would look more manly to go to the doctor and have a tooth taken out with the "machine."

"And you're sure it won't hurt?" he asked,

"Quite sure," said his mother. "Indeed, I shouldn't wonder if it dropped out before you got there."

Ferdinaud was so afraid it might he kept his mouth open and made haste to get ready.

"You must have the tooth out first, remember,' said his mother, as he started off.

Granville was delighted to see his little playmate, and wanted to hurry him out of doors to build mud forts, directly.

"I've got to have a tooth out first," said Ferdinand.

"Going io have a tooth pulled?" exclaimed Granville. "Oh, goody!"

"Why, Granville:" said his mother.

"Guess you wouldn't say 'goody' if it was yours," added Ferdinand, indignantly.

"Let me see it," said the doctor. "Oh· that's nothing? Granville could pull that as well as I could."

"Then let me," said Granville, promptly.

"May I, Ferdie? Do let me, papa!"

"Just as Ferdie says," said the doctor.

Ferdinand said he was willing if Granville would pull carefully and stop as soon as it hurt. Granville promised, and Ferdinand climbed into the great chair. Granville could not reach him then, so he climbed up into the chair too. It was big enough for both of them.

The doctor gave Granville tee forceps.

"Wait," said Ferdinand. "I guess I'll take ether."

"Yes," said Granville, eagerly. „Let's give him ether, papa."

But papa refused the ether, and they had to go on without it.

"First, open your mouth," suggested Granville. Ferdinand's mouth instantly opened to its widest extent.

"That's the one to pull," said the doctor, pointing to the tooth.

"Yes, I know," said Granville. „I can tell it because it leans over so." He took hold of it with the forceps.

Ferdinand shut his eyes tight and made an awful face. Granville pulled slowly, as he had promised.

"It's out! it's out!" he shouted, triumphantly.

"Where?" asked Ferdie, opening his eyes. I didn't feel anything."

"Then it's just as good as if you'd taken ether," said Granville, flourishing the tooth in the air. He felt as proud as if he had killed a lion.

"I s'pose I ought to pay you," said Ferdinand, presently. "How much will it be?"

"Oh! I guess 'bout a cent" said Granville.

"Well, I'll bring it to-morrow,' said Ferdinand.

Granville wanted to pull another. He and Ferdie felt all of their teeth but couldn't find another loose one So Granville gave up the forceps with a sigh, and the two boys went out to their mud forts.—Youth's Companion.

Bellefonte, Pa

——With sincere regret we have to chronicle the fact that the gentlemen comprising the firm of the Bellefonte Iron Co., have seen fit to make arrangements for the removal of their works to Williamsport.

The building of the car shops here having, last week, become a fait accompli, this step on the part of the gentlemen referred to, has elicited a great deal of surprise and censuring comment from all sides. Being ourselves unable to solve the problem and to understand what potent reasons these young and enterprising gentlemen might have thus to desert their native place, especially at a time when there was every prospect for a large home trade, we resolved to go to the fountain head for information of the reason why.

We were fortunate enough to meet all the members of the firm at their office, and upon stating the purport of our visit, were assured that the report, of the correctness of which we still had our doubts, was perfectly true.

One of the gentlemen then proceeded to say, whilst it grieved them profoundly thus to leave the place of their childhood, "a combination of circumstances adverse to their prosperity as manufacturers, compelled them to sever the ties that bound them here, and to seek elsewhere a field where they might be less likely to encounter so many difficulties as those with which they had to battle here."

He then went on to relate the nature of these difficulties. "In the first place," he said, "there is the exhorbitant freight on our little branch road—the Bald Eagle Valley Railroad—which makes a competition with other mills not obliged to use the transportation of this road, a difficult undertaking.

"With the small margin rolling mills have on the price of iron, you will easily understand that a difference of from three to five dollars per ton in freight, is amply sufficient to drive any concern thus encumbered, out of the market.—It is an actual fact, that we have to pay nearly as much freight from here to Tyrone as from Tyrone to Philadelphia, and it is just as true that Pittsburg manufacturers can ship to Philadelphia at about two-thirds of what we have to pay.

"Then, having a siding jointly with the glass works, we always had the greatest difficulty to induce the railroad officials here to do our shifting of cars, which, the switch being locked, we could not do ourselves.

"But the chief reason why we leave, is that we wished to considerably enlarge our business by adding more puddling furnaces, and especially by putting up a charcoal forge, and this we were unable to do here; in the first place, because of the high rates of freight above spoken of, and in the second place, because no charcoal could be had here at adequate figures.

"In Williamsport both these obstacles are overcome—cheap rates of freight having been secured both for the product to be used, as well as for the iron manufactured. All arrangements for an abundant supply of cheap charcoal have likewise been made.

"Different from puddled iron, there is a large margin on charcoal iron, as we propose making it, and we are sure that our undertaking will be successful.

"That the citizens of Williamsport share this opinion, is demonstrated by the fact that all the stock of the new company has already been taken up, and by the most prominent and far-seeing of their business men.

"The building, foundation and smoke stack remain here, and would be the very thing for the purpose of establishing a boiler plate mill to roll the charcoal iron manufactured here, which bears the just reputation of being the best in the country. This iron should be rolled here, and not leave the town in an unfinished state, giving large profits to outside parties, and to show our allegiance to our beautiful little town, we are ready at any moment to invest our money in erecting a mill for this purpose, provided we meet with the helping hand of our fellow citizens which has been so liberally extended to the strangers about to come here."

Here the interview ended, as two of the gentlemen had to leave to catch the train for Pittsburg, where they go to buy machinery for their new concern to be erected at once, and also to obtain plans for a boiler plate mill, and at their return they will be prepared to make their propositions to the people of the town.

Let us hope that every facility on the part of our citizens will be offered them, and let us show that we do not exemplify the old saying: "A prophet is not without honor, save in his own country."

DIED—At Towanda, Bradford county May 1st, 1873, EDWIN H. KINSLOE, aged twenty-eight years.

It is always painful to chronicle the death of any one. When life's meridian is passed, and the old man, whose years have been fruitful of good works and usefulness, drops the mortal form for the immortal, it does not awaken such sad emotions as when a young man, with the great field of life before him, with bouyant heart and hopes, with a mission to fulfill and a will to do it, is taken from us in the spring time of his life.

From boyhood the deceased suffered from a delicate physical organization, but he was possessed of so much mental vigor, so much energy and ambition that all who knew him regarded him as a prodigy. Learning the printing business he followed his profession for many years, and was at different times editorially connected with the Bellefonte Advertiser, the National, and daily Quid Nunc, the latter published at Lock Haven.

For several years past he was special agent of the Travellers Insurance Company of Hartford, Ct. He was singularly successful in this business, and was well and favorably known throughout the State. Unfortunately he did not limit his labor by his physical capacity to endure it. Had his physical powers been equal to his mental vigor and energy, there is no telling what station he would have attained to. His last letter to his mother showed that He "who tempereth justice with mercy" had been near him in his dying hours. Let us hope that he is happy in that world where sickness and death never enter.

——The countenance of Austin Hinton, that great high Democratic official, illuminated our office last Thursday. It is a pity to put so much man into one Democrat—a kind of waste of material. There's timber enough in him for two or three common "demmes." But he is magnificent, and we have license to say so for a year to come. When Sankey awakes, we'll expect to see a second Rip Van Winkle staring in at us.

——"The Bellefonte Car Works" was officered on Saturday last. Col. D. G. Bush was wisely chosen President. Geo. C. Wilkins, S. Austin Brew, Ed. Blanchard and John Strike are the directors. E. M. Blanchard is Secretary and Treasurer. The amount of capital stock is $100,000.00. G. C. Wilkins with a corps of engineers surveyed a line for the branch road to the site of the car shops on Saturday.

——"Yony" Kreamer, the elephant hotel man of Millheim, lately clipped ten pounds of wool from a ten-months old lamb of the Cotswold breed. The Reporter asks, "Who can beat it?" but we don't think any body would beat an innocent young lamb for nothing.

—— The Milesburg Foundry has changed hands, J. Miles Green having sold the entire concern to Mr. M. M. Faxon, who will keep the works in motion as usual.

——Bellefonte undertakers speak with grave authority when they say that coffins are going down.

——The Bellefonte Planing Mill was sold to the car company last week for eighteen thousand dollars.

——At Mrs. Dare's the strangest, strangest thing in bonnets, is the present style in chignons.

——Williamsporters should prepare for small-pox. Their defence should lie in their arms.

——That successful corn-extractor, the crow, is on hand in this county.

——John Robson has sold the Hecla Furnace property.

——Millheim school pleases the patrons.

——Lettuce have peas.

——Bush House serves up beef a-la-mode-ox.

——Frequented watering places—our town pumps.

——The base ball lunatics were out last week.

——Crowded out—Our Washington etter and local news.

——Whisky is said to be a horn of plenty because it will corn you copiously.

——A question for the new Professor in the Boalsburg Academy: Why did Pen-elope?

——The public Schools of this place will close with a concert on Friday Eve, May 23.

——Where is the Undine band that used to soothe the savage breast of Bellefonte?

——Wheat looks well throughout the county, and the prospect for a good crop is flattering.

——Motto of the White Star Line should be millions for speed but not a cent for safety.

——The acme of nullum in parvo—a double-row tooth-pick that can be used as a comb.

——Copies of the BELLEFONTE REPUBLICAN can be had every Tuesday evening at Beck's tobacco store.

——"No peaches this year," is heard on every hand, and the prospect for cherries and grapes is not good.

——The Beaver Radical looks beautiful this week,—both inside and outside pages are printed on the same side.

——President Grant declined to take the Southern trip, because it looked too much like "swinging 'round the circle."

——Bellefonte topers practice humiliating politeness by bowing to circumstances and raising their heads above water.

——Row, of the Raftsman Journal, is away from home, leaving his lousy boys in charge of the office.—Tyrone Herald.

——Ed. Perks called and subscribed for the REPUBLICAN. He said he didn't want to borrow a paper to read "our abuse" of himself.

——All the secret and municipal organizations of the borough are expected to take part in the decoration day ceremonies.

——We noticed a patriarchal looking individual writing the following on the Bush House register: "Hon. R. B. Petriken, Hundingdon."

——Two copies of the Cameron Co. Press came to our office last week.—Please don't. One dose of Gould per week is laxative enough.

——Some prominent members of the Masonic fraternity started, on Monday afternoon, to attend the meeting of the Grand Commandery of Knights Templar at Meadville.

——How closely the street lamplighter must watch his almanac. If the weather-prophet calls for new moon, and the night chances to be dark and stormy, the streets are not lighted as they should be. O! what, what economy!

——Our hotel and saloon keepers appear to pay strict attention to the Local Option Law. So far we have not heard of a single violation, which is certainly very creditable to them when we take into consideration that their business has been so seriously affected by the law.

——J. Steele Parsons, who for the last tweney-one years, has been tyler of the lodge of Free Masons in this place, and who, in that time, has missed only two meetings of the lodge, has gone to Texas. He only expects to Steele awhile away and intends to return in a few months.

——Perry Lucas, a resident of Union twp., near Unionville, and well known to many in the county, died on last Thursday, 8th inst., at his residence.—His remains were interred on Sunday in the Central Messiah's Church graveyard. A large concourse of people were present. The sermon was preached by Rev. J. Zeigler, on John, 5 c., 28 and 29 v.

——We have some of the finest roads in the vicinity of Bellefonte, that ever echoed to the clatter of a hoof or the rumble of a buggy; and, speaking of buggies, we lately visited the shops of S. A. McQuistion, near the Bellefonte depot. The new buggies and numberless other vehicles that attest his skill as a master-workman. The McQuistion buggy is the very best in this section, and "Mac" himself is a genial, upright gentleman, and deserves the patronage of our people.

——The county superintendents of the counties of Clinton, Snyder, Union, Northumberland, Lycoming, Sullivan, Tioga, Potter, Elk, Cameron and Centre will meet at the Herdic House in Williamsport, on Thursday, June 5th, at 9 A. M. The conference will be strictly private. The general questions to be considered will be the following:

1. The Educational Wants of the People.
2. The Work of the Superintendency.
3. The Difficulties Encountered in that Work.
4. Modes of Overcoming these Difficulties.

——If any of our subscribers on the Carrier's list fail to receive their paper this week, we hope they will give immediate notice at this office. We have a new carrier, and until he is familiar with the route, some of our subscribers may be missed.

——An equinal biped is the latest monstrosity of Eggtown. It is a fine, healthy looking colt, perfectly symmetrical and well proportioned in every way except that it has no fore legs. While sucking its dam it sits up like a kangaroo, and although it can't walk any, it seems to be as healthy and well contented as if it had (as the school-boy said), "a leg on each corner."

——It never rains, but it pours. The car-shop question is settled. Following it comes a pair of paper mills to be located on Spring Creek, one above and the other below town. We will give full particulars of this enterprise next week. Messrs. Heathcote & Co. have decided to erect a branch plate mill here soon, and now an ingenious yankee is arranging to start a toy factory. Of course we will soon be a city and manufacturing center. One thing remains to be done—subscribe for the BELLEFONTE REPUBLICAN.

"AN OLD ESTABLISHED FIRM.—The firm of S. M. Pettengill & Co. commenced their Advertising Agency in the old Journal building, No. 10 State Street, Boston, nearly a quarter of a century ago (Febuary 1849), where their Agency is still located, carrying on a large and successful business. They established a branch in New York City, May 1852, which has grown larger than the parent house,—increasing steadily, year by year, until now it has the agency of nearly every newspaper in the United States and British Provinces, and does a yearly business of hundreds of thousands of dollars, S. M. Pettengill & Co. have recently opened another branch office at 701 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, where they are doing a successful increasing business. They have done advertising exceeding ten millions of dollars since commencing business. This firm is favorably known not only throughout this country, but in all parts of the world. They have established a reputation for honorable and fair dealing which any firm might envy, and but few have attained to. We congratulate them upon their success. We would recommend all who want advertising done in any part of the country to call upon them. They can point to hundreds of business men who have followed their advice, and trusted to their sagacity, and availed themselves of their facilities, who have made fortunes for themselves, and they are daily assisting others in the same path."—Boston Journal, May 8th.

☞BY ONE OF THE LEADING PHYSICIANS of Philadelphia city.—A careful examination of mortuary statistics established the fact that one adult person out of every six dies of consumption, and so alarmingly is this disease gaining the ascendancy over all other ills to which flesh is heir, that its approach to one's immediate circle is regarded with perfect horror; If you will carefully examine the records of Materia Medica you will invariably discover that the general want of success in treating diseases has not been a deficiency of pathological knowledge of the functions affected, but of a suitable compound that would act upon the disease and all the sympathetic affections.

This want has at last been met in the Bitter Wine of Iron, prepared by the celebrated DR. E. F. KUNKLE, No 259 North Ninth street, Philadelphia. This excellent compound can be taken by persons with the most delicate stomach without any debilitating effect always giving strength and largely increasing the nervous energy of the patient. In all cases of pulmonary complaints it is admirably adapted to relieve the severity of the symptoms in the advanced stages of the disease, or to arrest it in its incipiency. If you want something that will give you strength, a good appetite, build up your constitution, and in place of moroseness and a lack of energy, give you a brisk and vigorous feeling, try Kunkel's Bitter Wine of Iron. It has already received the meed of praise from thousands who have tested its virtues, and for many years maintained its reputation with unfaded popularity.

Price $1 per bottle. E. F. KUNKEL, Sole Proprietor, No. 259 North Ninth street, below Vine, Philadelphia.

THE GREAT SOUTH AMERICAN
JURUBEBA
BLOOD PURIFIER

Is the most powerful cleanser, strengthener and remover of Glandular Obstructions known to Materia Medica.

It is specially adapted to constitutions "worn down" and debilitated by the warm weather of Spring and Summer, when the blood is not in active circulation, consequently gathering impurities from sluggishness and imperfect action of the secretive organs, and is manifested by Tumors, Eruptions, Blotches, Boils, Pustules, Scrofula, &c., &c.

When weary and languid from overwork, and dullness, drowsiness and inertia take place of energy and vigor the system needs a Tonic to build it up and help the Vital Forces to regain their recuperative power.

In the heat of Summer, frequently the Liver and Spleen do not properly perform their functions; the Uterine and Urinary Organs are inactive, producing weakness of the stomach and intestines and a predisposition to billious derangement.

DR. WELLS' EXTRACT OF JERUBEBA

is prepared directly from the SOUTH AMERICAN PLANT, and is peculiarly suited to all these difficulties; it will cleanse the VITIATED BLOOD, strengthening the LIFE-GIVING POWERS, and REMOVE ALL OBSTRUCTIONS from IMPAIRED AND ENFEEBLED ORGANS.

It should be freely taken, as Jerubeba is pronounced by medical writers the most efficient PURIFIER, TONIC and DEOBSTRUENT known in the whole range of medicinal plants.

BRIDGE DISASTER.

NINETY LIVES LOST.

A Weak Bridge Precipitates Three Hundred Men, Women and Children into a River.

CHICAGO, May 5.—An appalling calamity occurred at Dixon, Ill., about a hundred miles west of this city, by which some ninety persons lost their lives. A large number of people had assembled on the banks of Rock river to witness the baptism of a dozen converts, by Rev. J. H. Pratt, a Baptist minister. Some three hundred had gathered on the bridge, an iron structure of the Truesdale pattern, five hundred feet long, when suddenly a span gave way, and nearly two hundred were precipitated into the water, twenty feet below, and about eighteen feet deep. The scene of excitement that followed baffles description. The most frantic efforts were made by those on shore to rescue the struggling victims, some of whom were drawn out by the hair and by the limbs, and every effort made to resuscitate them. Up to six o'clock forty-one had been taken out dead, and many were badly injured by the falling timbers and striking on the rocky bottom, while fifteen or twenty were still missing. Most of the victims are women and children. The whole city is thrown into mourning by the calamity.

THE TRUESDALE BRIDGE.

The bridge that gave way is of the same pattern and style as the one that went down at Elgin on New Year's day with such fatal results. The bridge was of iron and had five spans elevated about twenty feet above the water, which at this point is from fifteen to twenty feet deep. Only two spans, the end ones fell. The three middle spans are still standing, but in such a condition that it is thought they will fall when the wreck of the end spans is cleared away.

REMARKABLE ESCAPES.

The escape of a little child of John Wadsworth, of Dixon, was almost miraculous. The little one floated down stream almost to the railroad bridge before it was found. The child will. it is believed, recover.

Mr. James L. Camp, and Mr. Fowler and his wife, by tremendous exertions escaped from the falling bridge. These were near the south end; and a young girl, daughter of H. Hazenepling, who was standing near them, and was carried down by the fall, dragged herself out of the wreck, to the shore end, clinging all the while to the hand-rail.

The most of the people were gathered at either end of the structure, though a large number were in the centre. Some of the latter remained where they were when the crash came and were afterwards taken off by boats. Several men jumped from their precarious resting-places into the river and swam ashore. Two horses and buggies were standing on the middle spans and are still there, there being no way to take them off.

There were a number of remarkable escapes of children, of whom there were probably not less than fifty on the bridge when it went down. One little fellow, about thirteen years old, was caught by both feet in the iron rigging of one of the fallen spans and had one of his legs broken. He managed by sheer strength to pull one of his boots off, tearing the soul off in the process, then coolly taking out his knife ripped the other boot from the foot of the wounded leg, and then, crippled as he was, swam ashore.

Two little girls, sisters, were standing side by side and went down together; as they reached the water the oldest caught the other by her dress with one hand and with the other clung to a portion of the iron work, and clung fast to it up to her neck in the icy water until they were both taken off by a boat.

American Sunday School Union.

FORTY-NINTH ANNIVERSARY, IN PHILADELPHIA—ACADEMY OF MUSIC CROWDED—SINGING BY THE ORIGINAL "OLD FOLKS CHOIR—ELOQUENT ADDRESSES BY Mr. T. U. WALTER, Chairman; Rev. M. D. HOGE, D. D., Richmond, Va.; Rev. H. M. SCUDDER, D. D., Brooklyn; Rev. J. H. VINCENT, D. D., New York.

An unusually large intelligent audience crowded the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, May 6, 1873, to attend the 49th Anniversary of the American Sunday School Union.

The several speakers ably advocated the importance of the Sunday-school work, as having a vital bearing upon the destinies of our country, and the world; alluding to the admirable adaptation of the means employed by the American Sunday School Union to confer these blessings upon remote and destitute regions, not reached by the Church in its denominational capacity.

These points are further illustrated by the abstract of the 49th Annual Report, which shows that 996 new schools have been established at points where none existed before; that in these there are 5384 voluntary labourers employed in teaching the great truths of the Bible to 39,735 children and youth. In addition to this, 2886 other Sunday Schools have been aided by visits from the missionaries, and grants of books and other requisites—these contain 19,361 teachers, 165,064 scholars; 13,923 familes have been religiously visited; 9426 copies of the Sacred Scriptures have been circulated, and grants of library books and periodicals, to the amount of $13,565,24, made.

The society reports an important work among the Freedmen of the South—its agency being of incalculable value, as the masses of these people find that the only time for religious and other instruction is on the Sabbath. To support themselves and their familes consuming every hour of the week. It is also pushing out its missionaries to the newly settling territories in the Rocky Mountains, the work on the Pacific Coast being already prosecuted with vigor.

A significant feature of the report is the intelligence from its "Foreign Committee," that France, Germany, Switzerland, Italy, Spain, Sweeden, Denmark, Holland, Central America, Mexico, and Brazil, are occupied by Sunday School workers, and that a commencement is made in Japan. The future opens gloriously, and with adequate means for carrying forward the work, there seems literally no limit to the good to be accomplished by the American Sunday School Union.

MRS. SYDNEY SMITH, of Freeport, Long Island, summoned a New York dentist to draw several teeth. She requested chloroform. The dentist objected, and Dr. Hammond, her family physician, gave her chloroform ... as she breathed it her heart ... ting, and she could not be aroused. Mr. Smith says she was in perfect health before taking the chloroform.

Centaur Liniment.

There is no pain which the Centaur Liniment will not relieve, no swelling it will not subdue and no lameness which it will not cure. This is strong language, but it is true. Where the parts are not gone, its effects are marvelous. It has produced more cures of rheumatism, neuralgia, lock-jaw, palsy, sprains, swellings, caked-breasts, scalds, burns, salt-rheum, earache, &c., upon the human frame, and of strains spavin, galls, &c., upon animals in one year than have all other pretended remedies since the world began. It is a counter-irritant, an all-healing pain reliever. Cripples throw away their crutches, the lame walk, poisonous bites are rendered harmless, and the wounded are healed without a scar. It is no humbug. The recipe is published around each bottle. It is selling as no article ever before sold, and it sells because it does just what it pretends to do. Those who now suffer from rheumatism, pain or swelling, deserve to suffer if they will not use Centaur Liniment. More than 1000 certificates of remarkable cures, including frozen limbs, chronic rheumatism, gout, running tumors, &c., have been received. We will send a circular containing certificates, the recipe, &c., gratis, to any one requesting it. One bottle of the yellow wrapper Centaur Liniment is worth one hundred dollars for spavined or sweenied horses and mules, or for screw-worm in sheep. Stock-owners—this liniment is worth your attention. No family should be without Centaur Liniment. Price, 50c. a bottle, large bottles $1. 00. J. B. ROSE & Co.,

WISHART'S PINE TREE TAR CORDIAL,

NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY

FOR THE

Throat & Lungs.

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lung Diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefitted and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation (which produces cough) of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw of the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood.

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipicac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

SUGAR-MAKERS' SONG.

O'er the arch all day
We boil away
The sap which the maples ran;
And as we sip
We slowly dip
The sweet from pan to pan.

While at work we sing,
And the wild woods ring
To the sound of voices shrill,
Till the sun sinks to rest,
Far down in the west,
Behind the wood-crowned hill.

Above us, high,
In the starry sky,
The silvery moon is shining;
While far below,
On the crystal snow,
Are the shadows intertwining.

The deepening shades
Of the forest glades
Seem figures strange and dark;
And down by the rill
That flows to the mill
We hear the lone fox bark.

Our camp-fire bright
Throws a cheery light
On the trees that round it stand;
And our voices ring out,
With laughter and shout,
Far over the wooded land.

So there we stay
Till break of day,
Till the sun in beauty rises,
Till the golden light
Of the morning bright,
The slumbering world surprises.

Agricultural Pickings.

Flour gains in weight about one-sixth in passing into bread. Meat of all kinds loses both by weight and substance in cooking. Eggs come back to you with full weight whether boiled or fried.

The first business of the farmer should be to secure ways and means to preserve fully all the excreta from his cattle, both liquid and solid.

From 8,000,000 to 10,000,000 sheep are boiled down annually for their tallow in Buenos Ayres.

A farm in Haddingtonshire, Scotland, was recently rented for $15 per acre, per annum; besides this the tenant was bound to expend $15,000 on the buildings without repayment at the end of the lease, which was for eleven years.

The Canada way of measuring a tree is said to be as certain as it is grotesque: You walk from the tree, looking at it from time to time between your knees. When you are able to see the top in this way, your distance from the foot of the tree equals its hight.

Woolen Rag Manure was used by a Frenchman in Campino, when planting out his fruit trees on poor land, each tree receiving 20 to 24 pounds of it at the time of planting. This manure is very rich in avote, and is said to have produced wonderful results.

Lime for Apple Trees, scattered in a powdered state over the soil late in the Fall or early in the Spring, at the rate of one peck per square rod, is said, by a writer in the Western Rural, to be most beneficial.

A Connecticut farmer having an elephant on his hands in the shape of 1,200 bushels of apples, for which there was no market, "settled the matter by feeding them to his cows—at the rate of one bushel each per day—with very satisfactory results, securing a largely increased flow of milk."

Farm Implements.

Much is accomplished now upon the farm by the use of improved farm implements, especially in harvesting. In fact, in these times of high and poor labor, it would be impossible for the farmer to succeed without the horse-hoe, the cultivator, the modern plows, the excellent harrows, the horse-mowers, hay-lifters and other improved farming tools.

But the farmer must buy with caution, as he may be worse "humbugged" than he has ever been with "patent manures" or special preparations for the soil. The rich man who supports a farm may run into every new thing and he is the man to do it, while those farmers whom the farm supports will profit from their neighbor's example, and learn to buy wisely. It is necessary in these days to employ all labor-saving apparatus, but to be on guard to avoid getting cheated.

Lime And Salt.

Prof. Johnson recommends for fertilzing purposes to mix one bushel of salt and two bushels of dry lime under cover, and allow the mixture to decompose gradually, thus forming chemical union. For this purpose the mixture should be made six weeks before use, or still better, two or three months, the heap being turned over occasionally. This salt and lime mixture, when applied at the rate of 20 or 30 bushels per acre forms an excellent top-dressing for many crops. It acts powerfully on the vegetable matter of soils; 56 bushels applied to turnips have produced as large a crop as barnyard manure. It is destructive to grubs and insects in the soil. Like salt, it attarcts moisture from the air, and is useful against drouth. Its decomposing power is remarkable, and if 3 or 4 bushels of it are mixed with a load of muck the latter will be thoroughly powdered.

The Influence Of The Moon.

How common it is to hear people talk about planting corn, potatoes, and other crops at the right time of the moon, and to hear that many insist on killing their pork in the increase of the moon that it may not "shrink in the pot." Out west a Farmers' Club has been discussing the question of "lunar farming," and the same and similar points were made by the speakers. The club do not agree by any means as to the matter, and to get it off their shoulders, they referred it to the Praire Farmer. That paper argues both sides of the question, and by a unanimous vote commits it to the custody of the Agricultural Colleges, with the demand for an answer.

Map Of The Farm.

Nothing will so much conduce to the adoption of a system of working the farm as a well prepared map, hung where the farmer can see it every day. It will be sure to set him to thinking and planning how best to pitch his crops, and how best to work to save work. And once the farmer adopts a system of farming, he starts on the road to success. It matters not that the system is not the best that could be devised, so long as it is a system it is infinitely to be preferred to the hap-hazard practice of many farmers. We, therefore, advise every reader who owns a farm to make at once, or have made, a map of it, and hang it up where he can see every day. And having made it study it.

Moral and Religious.

BURY THY SORROW.

Bury thy sorrow.
The world has its share,
Bury it deeply,
Kill it with care.

Think of it calmly,
When curtained by night;
Tell it to Jesus,
And all will be right.

Tell it to Jesus,
He knoweth thy grief;
Tell it to Jesus,
He'll send thee relief,

Gather the sunlight
Aglow on thy way,
Gather the moonbeams,
Each soft, silver ray;

Hearts grown aweary
With heavier woe,
Droop 'mid the darkness;
Go comfort them, go.

Bury thy sorrow;
Let others be blest;
Give them the sunshine,
Tell Jesus the rest.

SUNDAY READINGS—NO. 14.

Dost thou still retain thine integrity? Job

Discouragement sometimes seizes upon the bravest and truest hearts. A feeling is born within their depths that exertion has been vain, that the harvest does not recompense for the toil; and though there be a harvest its value is suddenly diminished.

There comes with all this a feeling of utter dissatifaction, a consciousness of being stranded at last after long buffetings with the billows, a heart-sinking for which language has no expression. And this burden one generally chooses to bear alone, too often separating itself from the only source of consolation.

There are reasons why it is not easy to pour into human ears the tale of despondency, and among them is the intuitive belief that the listener may not see from our standpoint; the shadows may be only for us, the brightness and the hope for him, and so the great burden is borne under a cloud bounded only by the horizon, and gloom settles in the eye and smiles flee the lips.

Who that has lived to middle age but has experienced all this—the sinking of the heart, the doubt, the discouragement, and asked the fateful question, what remains to me of all this wearying strife? There may not be much gold, learning or fame; the heart may not have reaped its harvest of goodwill; but there is something intangible, yet real, something that money cannot buy, yet is more enduring than itself, which if a man possess he cannot be utterly cast down—this is integrity.

Whatever the darkness life's phases may assume, whatever feeling of insecurity may attach itself to worldly possessions, the soul that holds fast its integrity is strong to meet the storm and is patient in its trusting faith in God. Money, fame, health, friends, elude the grasp; life grows wearying in its endless distractions; hopes that were so brilliant in youth's radiant morning, have faded as sunset hues vanish into the coming night; and if integrity rule not the stormy elements of the human character, then indeed is the time of our probation a failure of dire potent.

Dost thou still retain thine integrity? If so, then all other failures may be borne with fortitude for this is something that worldly success cannot invade. If it has possessed the soul, there its enemies, doubt, despondency, despair, may assail it in vain. They may darken the sunlight and embitter the sweetest fountain, and scatter thorns beneath the feet, but the Comforter, which is the Holy Spirit, abides with the upright in heart, and strength and consolation come when needed.

Dost thou still retain thine integrity? No! Then indeed the great flood of this world's tribulations must overwhelm and distroy. There is naught within to counteract the gloom and desolation when the dark days come as they do come to all. Without this firm rock on which to rest, man is at the mercy of each threatening wave. He sees its approach; he cannot fall back upon his innate strength, that was squandered long ago, and he sinks helpless before a power mightier than his own.

Integrity! what is it but to be faithful to each trust, to love truth for its heavenly beauty, to stand untempted amid the allurements of the world, to carry into the secret purposes of the heart, not a motive but could invite the pure, searching eye of God.

This is the ingredient that is needed in each character, else is it the prey of the spoiler, the toy of circumstances, the spoiled heir of fortune, the laughter of fools who see not the reflection of their own folly.

Do I possess this integrity, this armor in the battle of life, this sword of the spirit, whereby its foes are slain? If not, what matters then these crowded storehouses of memory, this badge of fame, scores of flatterers and heaps of flashing gold? All good if integrity weigh and regulate—then then are they servants;—but as masters powerless to sustain against despondency or despair.

Dost thou still retain thine integrity? Keep it as the one imperishable good amid the wrecks of time, the one jewel that will shine brightest before the throne of the Eternal. H. J. L.

mean to frighten you in this way, all th same."

"Oh, never mind that, Mr. Lockwood," exclaimed Minna, "I—I am so thankful! It will save my father's life, and—and make me the happiest—"

But she could not finish; she sat down on the heap of sacks near and cried from sheer joy and surprise.

Yes, it was the man so long supposed to have been murdered by the father who stood there hale and well. Thanks to John Lockwood (who had traced out and found him in the far-off woods of Canada), Walter Soames had learned the misery of which he had been the unintentional cause, and had immediately hastened to England to put matters right.—The travelers had been detained by the snow-storm for three days, but at last had pushed up the Dale at the peril of their lives, and reached the mill in the dead of night.

Walter Soames, it appeared, had left England two days after his ill-fated visit to the mill, and taken ship for America under a changed name. There he had gone through the usual hard experiences of young men who prefer a vagabond artist life to a decorous professional one.—He had at one time traveled amongst the farm-houses of Canada, picking up a living by painting likenesses; and it was on one of these occasions that he made the acquaintance of the Lockwoods, who had shown him such kindness that, on parting, he presented them with that sketch of Scawton Mill which had been the lucky means of his identification.—But Walter Soames having ultimately taken to farming, and married a rich Canadian farmer's daughter, was now in a position to give substantial assistance to the person on whom he had unconsciously inflicted such a grave injury.

"The only thing, Mr. Ringston, that can restore my peace of mind," said he, "will be your decision to leave this unlucky place, and return with me to Canada, where I will undertake to put you into a farm, and find you a good home."

The miller shook his head—said he was "too old and broken now." But he already began to look like another man, as he beheld the cloud that had so long darkened his life, passing away. The proposal was urged with so much force and good feeling that ultimately he consented, being strongly advised thereto by the young Canadian, who, though a very unselfish fellow, had here a distinctly personal object in view. That object so directly concerned the miller's daughter, that to her ear he confided it in strictest privacy.

"I have loved you, Minna," said he, "ever since I first saw you making bread in your father's kitchen, and if you'll only come to my country and make bread for me, I'll promise you a good home, and the love of a man who can keep his promise, as you know. Do say 'yes.'"

Minna did say "Yes," and so new and happy a life dated from the time when she and her father reached their Canadian home, that it was only when they looked at a certain treasured picture on their parlor wall (with the signature W. S. in the corner), that they could realize that they had ever known such gloomy and disastrous days as those they had spent at the old mill in Scawton Dale.

THERE were two hundred and fifty-four twins born in the State of Minnesota during the past year.

DEATH OF HON. H. N. MCALLISTER.—The death of this great and good man was not wholly unexpected. When he returned home, about five weeks ago, his wasted form, his feeble step and pale, exhausted looking countenance, were alarming to his friends, and when he returned to Philadelphia his physicians and friends warned him of the danger of leaving home, in his [then] present condition; but it was his nature to work while there was work to do and life lasted.

He died at his boarding house on Monday morning, May 5th.

On the next day our distinguished townsman, HON. A. G. CURTIN, who had been at his bedside during the last few days of his life, offered in the Constitutional Convention the following resolutions which were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That with most sincere feelings of unfeigned sorrow we learn of the death of Hon. H. Nelson McAllister, a member of this Convention, who enjoyed the highest measure of respect for his learning and ability, and esteem for services.

Resolved, That his death deprives the Convention of one of its most enlightened and industrious members, the Commonwealth of one of her most public spirited and useful citizens the community in which he lived of a man whose indomitable energy, inflexable integrity and spotless character, attached to him the confidence and affection of all who knew him, and his family of a kind and devoted husband and father.

Resolved, That we do most heartily offer to the members of his bereaved family the homage of our sympathy and condolence in this the time of deep distress.

Resolved, That in respect for the memory of our departed colleague, the President is requested to appoint a committee of delegates to attend his funeral at Bellefonte on Thursday next.

Resolved, That the clerk be directed to transmit a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

In offering these resolutions Mr. Curtin pronounced the following touching eulogy on the life of the deceased:

MR. PRESIDENT.—When we listened a few days since to the eloquent and just eulogies on the character and public service of William Hopkins, we did not suppose that in the wisdom of a mysterious providence the great destroyer would soon strike down another member of this body, a man quite his peer in all respects. In many of their characteristics, in their earnestness of purpose, in their integrity, and their christian character, William Hopkins and Hugh Nelson McAllister were wonderfully alike; and without any disrespect to the living or want of their learning or usefulness, it can be truly said that no two men could have been taken from this enlightened body whose services were of more importance to its deliberations or whose loss will be more heavily felt in the communities in which they lived.

Mr. McAllister, our colleague, was born in Juniata county, Penna., then Mifflin county, on the 28th of June, 1809, so that he was approaching his 64th year, when he died. He was born upon the farm, still in the possession of the family, upon which his grandfather settled, who was the second white man to settle in the valley of Lost Creek in that county. Spending his early life in ordinary labor on the farm, he received at a neighboring academy the preparatory education necessary for his entrance into college, and at the proper time he entered Jefferson College at Cannonsburg, Pa., where he graduated with distinguished honors. On his return to his home he entered as a student of law the office of William W. Potter, then the leader of the bar in the central portion of Penna. He completed his law studies in the Law School of Dickenson College, under the charge of the late Judge Read.

When he had been admitted to the bar he returned to Bellefonte and commenced the practice of his profession. He had not to wait long for practice. He entered upon a lucrative business almost immediately on his admission to the bar, and from the day of his admission down to the time of his death he continued to enjoy a large and remunerative practice, the confidence of his clients, and the respect and affection of all the people of that portion of Pennsylvania, who admired purity of character, integrity, energy, and a freedom from all the arts and appliances which in modern times have detracted so much from the character of public men and defiled the politics of our time.

At the time of Mr. McAllister's admission to the bar Judge Burnside was upon the bench in the 4th district. He was afterwards removed to a seat on the bench of the Supreme Court, and a distinguished and learned gentleman of this Convention, who has attained high eminence in his profession, became the district judge; and for ten years, the ten years of the beginning of his professional life, ten years of constant progress, of growing professional confidence, and of expanding news as he grew to the full proportions of his distinguished manhood, he practiced before his Honor, Judge Woodward, who was the then President Judge of the Common Pleas of his district.

Mr. McAllister never held a public station until he appeared in this convention. He had a distaste for public life. He never would condescend to the means by which public station is too often acquired. His was a life of labor and industry, and with the earnestness of purpose which attached itself to his professional character, which incorporated him with the rights and interests of his clients, which led him to intensify all the feelings of his nature on any public work in which he was engaged, in any private enterprise, or enlarged charity and hospitality, Mr. McAllister could not from his nature be a politician.

But so great was his influence in the part of the State in which he lived, so entirely had he engrossed the confidence of the people of that community that he could at frequent periods of his life have held public station if he had been willing. Over and over again he was solicited to accept office from the people, and more than once his friends united in importunities to him to permit himself to be placed in judicial stations. Once at least during his professional life he refused to be the President of the Common Pleas of his district, and I know full well that there is upon this floor a gentleman who would have been only too glad if his friends had presented his name for appointment. I hesitate to say that the members of this Convention knew little of this man until he appeared amongst them as a member of the body. I know equally well that it would be a more fruitful subject and more acceptable if I could speak of public works, of high official position, and the discharge of important political duties. I have no such eulogy on my dead friend. I can only speak of him as a true man, an honest, upright citizen, discharging all the private and relative duties to the public, to himself and to his family. I can speak only of his integrity, of his earnestness of his purity, aye more, I can speak of his devoted christian character. Mr. McAllister was a true believer in the christian faith, and for many years of his life devoted much of his time to the affairs and welfare of the church to which he belonged and of which he was a ruling elder. It is a consolation to the sorrowing members of this Convention who were his friends to know that his accounts were settled, his peace was made with his God; and while we regret that a long life of suffering and ill-health has closed and the useful and the good man has gone, we have the consolation of knowing that there is no fear of his future rest, and peace, and happiness.

Many years since, when worn down by the constant labors of his professional life, Mr. McAllister conceived the idea that, in harmony with the tastes of first pursuits, his health might be restored by turning his attention to agriculture. He purchased a farm in the neighborhood of Bellefonte, where he lived, and turned his attention to skilled agriculture. He made that farm the model for all the people of the neighborhood. He introduced the most approved scientific culture of the day, the artificial stimulus necessary to restore exhausted land, and the most approved implements of modern farming; and while he made that the most perfect model farm in the State, he improved the arts of agriculture in all the surrounding country. Where there is a noticeable improvement in the manner of cultivation and increase in production learned from the experience and experiments and skill of the lawyer-farmer who made agriculture merely the collateral of his professional life.

When Mr. McAllister, with his zeal and his industry, became connected with practical agriculture, his views enlarged and he conceived the idea of establishing in Pennsylvania a college where farming would be taught as a chief part of a complete education, and to that man belongs the credit in a large measure, of the establishment of first the Farm School of Pennsylvania, and now the Agricultural College; and while other men faltered and hesitated under disappointment, when that school would have failed over and over again, the energy and persistence of this man kept it alive, and before his death he had the satisfaction of seeing it in successful operation, and there is not today in all this great Commonwealth a more successful educational institution than the Farmers' College of Pennsylvania.

I speak of these things as the public works of the man. I speak of his character as a loss to the neighborhood in which he has lived and labored. I speak of his christian character and belief as an example to all men who are to follow him. This, Mr. President, is a public occasion and this man died in a public place. It is fit that proper expression of sympathy and regret should be made in this body, but it is perhaps no place, and this no occasion to intrude private sorrows; and yet, at the risk of an impropriety, I shall be permitted to speak of this man as my friend for many years—I was not his equal at the bar, but his rival; and in all the struggles of an active professional life and amid the antagonisms which grow out of the trials which constantly occurred, in which we were opposing counsel, rarely indeed was our constant friendship interrupted. With an inclination to attract men and a modicum of ambition for public life, I admire in this man just the opposite qualities. To have made himself Governor or President, our colleague who is dead, would have never turned his intensity of purpose, his settled convictions of public and private duty, or his well settled religious belief. In that respect I never knew the man's equal, and while it could not be said that he had the affection which more attractive and magnetic qualities draw to the public man, everybody had the conviction who knew him, that he was a man of sterling integrity, of constant labor, of iron fidelity, and of a will which fixed in a direction he believed right and true, never failed to carry with them the accomplishment of his purpose. And this Convention will pardon me even here for the expression of my individual sorrow at the death of this good man My heart goes out in sympathy to the neighborhood in which he lived, where the people are in tears to day, because they have lost their foremost and best citizen, and we are united in sorrow over his dead body.

Between humanity living and humanity dead there is but a moment. The tabernacle which held the spirit made by God's own hand in his image is no more; and the spirit has gone to settle a final account. Eulogy can be of no consequence. When the good man dies a void is felt in society where he lived; and we marvel at the mysterious Providence which takes away the useful, the charitable, and the good. It is no time for praise; it is the time to make solemn resolutions to imitate the example which they leave behind them, and the good works and the purity of character the fidelity and the integrity are benefactions the good man leaves to those who are to follow him. Treading in the examples thus set it is for those who live when the great destroyer comes to them to leave behind such a character and such works and such a blameless life that the benefactions they receive from those who are gone before may be shed upon those who are to follow them.

Of such a character was this man. He has left us a life to imitate, and let us profit by such an example. For long as the people live in the Blue Mountains of Pennsylvania, long as there shall be a man who loved virtue, and truth, and integrity, there will be a fresh green and beautiful christian remembrance over the grave of Hugh Nelson McAllister, when he is forgotten by those who have only enjoyed his acquaintance for a time and welcomed him to their councils when his health was broken, and dissolution fast, alas, too fast, approaching.

I am not in a condition to trust myself further. In youth we separate from our friends with regret. At the springtime of life, when all the future is rose-colored, we soon forget the separations which death causes. Nature's laws invite us to the enjoyment of health, vigor, life. In large communities where you enjoy the friendship of the many, the dropping away of a friend to-day or to-morrow, makes but a ripple on the surface or public affairs, or social life; of the event we take little note; but when the man of a small community, of a village in the country goes, all in that community feel the loss, and those who lived and enjoyed the small circle of intimate friendship and social relations feel deeply the wound when death strikes down one, but one, if he was a useful and just man. I will be pardoned for my emotion by those who live in the interior of the State when I express so much feeling over the grave of Nelson McAllister, who was my companion in life, my neighbor, and higher and more sacred to my memory, he was my friend.

Addresses were also delivered by ex-Gov. Bigler, Hon. C. R. Buckalew, Hon. W. H. Armstrong, Andrew Reid, Esq., John M. Baily Esq., and a number of other members, all paying the highest tribute to the virtues and worth of their departed colleague.

At his home, on the Sunday preceding his death, a telegram announced his critical condition; fervent prayers were offered in his behalf at the evening service of the church of which he was a member. On Monday morning the sad news of his death cast a gloom over the whole community. Court was in session, but he who, for many years, had been the champion of the bar was not there to meet his clients, or try their causes.

His colleagues had no heart for the duties before them, and court was adjourned for the week.

The committee appointed by the Constitutional Convention to attend his funeral, composed of Hons. A. G. Curtin, J. M. Bailey, T. R. Hazzard, W. H. Smith, Andrew Reed, Geo. N. Corson, and J. Alexander Simpson, arrived on Tuesday evening, having in charge the corpse. Hons. J. H. Orvis, W. P. Wilson and Geo. M. Yocum, a committee appointed by the bar, met the delegation at Tyrone. The corpse was taken to his late residence on Allegheny street, where hundreds of our people called to pay a last tribute of respect and love to him whom they had learned to honor and esteem.

On Thursday morning delegations arrived from all parts of the county, and representations of the legal profession from adjoining counties. From the Clinton county bar were Hons. C. G. Furst, L. A. Mackey, Gen. Jesse Merrill, James Chatham, R. J. Armstrong, C. S. McCormick, J. M. Deise and W. H. Brown. From Clearfield, Judges Barrett and McEnally, and Wm. McCullough, Esq.

Many prominent men from various parts of the State were present, among them U. S. Senator John Scott, Hons. Samuel Linn, R. Bruce Petrikin, and Judge A. O. Heister.

At 11 o'clock A. M. a meeting of the bar was held in the Court House, at which Hon. C. A. Mayer presided.

A committee composed of Hons. Samuel Linn, A. G. Curtin, A. O. Furst, Jno. H. Orvis and Ed. Blanchard, reported the following resolutions which were unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we have learned with feelings of profound sorrow, of the death of Hon. H. N. M'Allister, who for a period of nearly forty years stood in the front rank of the legal profession, not only in this and the neighboring, Judicial Districts, but who by his learning his industry and integrity has acquired throughout the entire State a high and enviable reputation as a lawyer of eminent ability; and who by his liberality, his enterprising spirit, his devoted patriotism, his steady and earnest desire to be foremost in every good work whether pertaining to religion, morality education or patriotism, by his open hearted benevolence and his unswerving devotion to duty, and to the advancement and promotion of whatever he regarded as right, has won the unbounded esteem, admiration and confidence of the entire community; and who by reason of intense anxiety to rerform his whole duty as a member of the Constitutional Convention regardless of the decline of his physical strength, fell at his post a martyr to that high sense of duty which has been the guiding star of his life.

Resolved, That as members of the legal profession, we fully appreciate the irreparable loss that our membership has sustained by the decease of one of our number to whom we have been accustomed to look for wise and prudent counsel and stood amongst us as an acknowledged leader; one whom we had learned and been accustomed to admire and esteem for his many estimable qualities, for his profound learning his kindness toward the younger members of the profession, his sterling honesty and integrity, his benevolence and hospitality, his fidelity to his clients, and his untiring devotion to faithful execution of every trust committed to his care.

Resolved, That his death will be deeply lamented by all whose privilege it was to know him; by the church of which he was an officer and exemplary member, and to the interest of which much of his time, his zeal and his worldly substance were freely offered; by all those who sympathized with him in his efforts for the the education of young men and fitting them for spheres of usefulness; by the associations organized for the promotion of religion and moral reform; by the poor, who shared largely in his bounty; by the friends of public improvement; by all, both young and old, who resorted to him for counsel and advice; by a sorrowing community who feel and know that a great and a good man has been called to his reward; but most of all by his own family circle who best knew his virtues and his worth, and were the constant recipient of his favor and his love.

Resolved, That the Agricultural College of Pennsylvania has, by his death, suffered the loss of its best truest friend, and patron, who devoted to its permanent foundation and ultimate success the best and the most disinterested energies of his life, and to whose efforts the institution owes its present prosperity and its bright prospects of future success.

Resolved, That we will attend his funeral in a body, and will wear the usual emblem of mourning for his departure, and respect for his memory.

Resolved, That Hon. James MacManus is appointed and requested to present the foregoing resolutions to the Court of Common Pleas of Centre County at the next term thereof, and to move the said court that the same be transcribed and entered at large upon the record of the court.

Resolved, That we sympathize with his family in their sorrow, and that A. O. Furst be a committee to convey to his widow and children our expression of sincere condolence, and to present to them a copy of these resolutions.

In offering the above resolutions Judge Linn referred most feelingly to his youthful association with the deceased, and the pleasant intercourse as brother members of the profession, that they had so long enjoyed. He was followed by ex-Gov. Curtin, Senator John Scott, and Cline G. Furst. The Court House was crowded with prominent citizens from different parts of the State, and the citizens of our county and borough.

There was something touching in the assemblage and sentiment of that large concourse of people. Something that impressed the fact that the Church and State, the profession of which he was a member, and the community in which he lived had suffered a loss as irreparable as lamentable.

Notwithstanding the very inclement weather the funeral was largely attended, and as his honorable and aged associates bore his earthly remains to their resting-place, the heavens seemed to weep in sympathy with the sorrowing cortege.

MCALLISTER—At his boarding house in Philadelphia, May 5th, 1873, HON. HUGH NELSON MCALLISTER, aged 63 years, 10 months and 7 days.

The subject of this memoir was of Scotch-Irish decent; his great grandfather having emigrated from Ireland to Lancaster County, Pa., about the year 1730. His grandfather Major Hugh McAllister was born in Little Brittian township, Lancaster county, in 1736. He enlisted as a private in Captain Forbes company in the Indian war of 1763, and served fathfully until the close of the hostilities. During the darkest hours of the revolutionary struggle Hugh McAllister was the first man to volunteer as a private to form a company for the purpose of reinforcing the shattered army of Washington. This company was raised at Lost Creek Valley, now Juniatta county, and was commanded by Captain John Hamilton; the grandfather of A. Boyd Hamilton, Esq., of Harrisburg, and of Prof. John Hamilton, of the Agricultural College. The company commanded by Captain Hamilton joined the army of Washington, after the capture of the Hessians at Trenton. Hugh McAllister was successively promoted to be Lieutenant, Captain and Major. Toward the close of the war he was in command of the forces stationed at Potter's Fort, Centre county, and commanded an expidition sent to punish the Indians for depredations committed near the Great Island, where the city of Lock Haven now stands. At the close of the war, Maj. McAllister retired to his farm in Lost Creek Valley, Juniata county. He was married to Sarah Nelson, and raised a large family. Hon. William McAllister son of Maj. Hugh McAllister and Sarah Nelson, was born on the farm of his father in Lost Creek Valley, in August, A. D. 1774. He served as a soldier in the war of 1812, and was for a long time one of the Associate Judges of Juniata county. He was married to Sarah Tompson. Hugh Nelson McAllister, eldest son of Hon. William McAllister and Sarah Tompson was born on the farm owned by his father and grandfather in Lost Creek Valley, Juniata county, Pa., June 28, 1809. He lived at home and worked upon his father's farm during his minority, recieving such elementary education as the schools of the neighborhood afforded. He recieved his instruction in the rudiments of the classics from Rev. John Hutchinson. He entered the Freshman class at Jefferson College, Cannonsburg, in 1830, and stood so high before the year as to be choosen by his society as one of its debaters, which honor, however, his modesty and timidity induced him to decline. He graduated in 1833, high in a class in which were many more since distinguished in the church and state. As soon as he graduated, Mr. McAllister commenced the study of law in the office of Hon. W. W. Potter, in Bellefonte. After completing the ordinary course of studies pursued by students in an office, he attended a law school then conducted at Carlsle by Hon. John Reed, President Judge of that district, and author of "Penn'a., Blackstone." On the 25th of November, 1835, on motion of W. W. Potter, Mr. McAllister was admitted to practice in the several courts of Centre county. He was at once taken into full partnership by Mr. Potter, and the election of the latter to Congress soon after threw at once the whole labor and responsibility of an extensive law practice upon the young partner. As in every subsequent situation in life Mr. McAllister brought so much abillity, earnestness, zeal and indomitable perseverance, to bear as to overcome all obstacles, and so successfully meet all responsibilities resting upon him. The early death of Mr. Potter, while in Congress, left Mr. McAllister alone in the practice to compete with one of the ablest bars in the State. He remained without partner until Gen. James A. Beaver was called to the bar in 1859. From this time the law practice was conducted under the firm name of McAllister and Beaver. During the long professional career of nearly thirty eight years he had an extensive, laborious and lucrative practice. Until the last eight or ten years he regularly attended the courts of Clinton and Huntingdon counties, and at times courts of other counties. As a counselor he was always discreet, careful and safe. As an attorney he was faithful, and industrious. As an advocate, he was, zealous and at times impressively eloquent. He would embark in no man's cause, unless thoroughly impressed with its justice, and then he battled, as only a man of his temperament could battle, for the right. In the preparation of cause he was most thorough, and frequently performed and amount of labor, which seemed beyond human endurance. His arguments before the Supreme Court of the state, of which the books of reports are full, were always strong, clear and exhaustive.

During the late war, Mr. McAllister was one of the most earnest and zealous supporters of the administration. He was ever foremost in contributing means and performing work to secure volunteers and supporting the families of those who were in the service. He did more than any other one man to raise and organize the many companies which left Centre Co., and finally almost by his unaided exertions raised a full company, and was elected its captain. Although far beyond the age when men are releived from military duty, and being unfit by education, habits and the state of his health, for the hardships of a campaign, he accepted the responsibility, went with his company to the field and served faithfully until his place could be filled by a young man.

Mr. McAllister never held many public offices. During the administration of Gov. Shunk he was tendered the appointment of President Judge of his district, but preferring the active practice of his profession, declined it. After the close of the war, he was appointed by the Governor one of the Commissioners to investigate, settle and adjust the claims of citizens of the border counties for losses sustained by the war. This arduous and responsible duty he performed in a manner highly satisfactory to the State officials, as well as to the people immediately interested. At the last Republican State convention, he was selected as one of the fourteen delegates at large to the Convention to reform the State Constitution. The nomination of the delegates at large by either party, was under the provisions of the act calling the convention, equivalent to an election. He at once commenced a thorough preparation for the duties thus devolved upon him. He procured all works on Constitutional law, the proceedings of Constitutional Conventions, the various State Constitutions now in force or which had been proposed, and all other publications bearing upon the subject within the reach of any private citizen, and devoted months of incessant study and labor to master their contents. When the convention assembled in Harrisburg last November, probably no single member was so thoroughly prepared as he, to enter into an intelligent discharge of the labors for which they were convened. He was appointed chairman of the important committee on "Suffrage, Election and Representation," and a member of the committee on "Railroads and Canals."

He entered upon his work with the energy and zeal which ever characterized him. Unfortunately he did not limit by his physical capacity to endure it, but by the desire for the permanent good of his native State. Towards the close of winter, his strength gave way under incessant toil, and he was compelled by his physician to return home for rest. He remained at home four or five weeks, during which time he improved in strength. Three weeks before his death, actuated by an intense desire to take part in the important discussions then going on in the Convention, and by his improved health, he went back to Philadelphia, and at once engaged arduously in the labor of the Convention. He made several important speeches upon questions pending before that body. He had over-estimated his strength, for his intense labor brought on the disease which in a few days terminated his earthly career. Literally he offered himself a sacrifice upon the alter of his Commonwealth. He sacrificed his life in his effort to protect the people from the corruptions of the times, and the evils of misgovernment. The delegates at large elected on the ticket with him, will select a successor, but they cannot fill his place.

As a citizen Mr. McAllister was always enterprising, public-spirited and patriotic. He took the lead in every enterprise designed to promote the public good. He labored hard and contributed liberally for all such purposes. This he did, not in a spirit of speculation to promote his own good, but to benefit the people. He was one of the projectors, the constant friends and liberal supporters of the Agricultural College of Penna. He kept the County Agricultural Society in existence for years almost unaided. He was the friend and supporter of the common schools, academies, and seminaries, as well as Sunday schools. For many years he was the recognized head of the organizations in the county for the promotion of temperance. As a neighbor he was ever considerate, kind, obliging and liberal. As a man he was just, upright and inflexibly honest. He was not honest from policy, but from an innate love of right and an intense hatred of everything wrong. As a husband and father he was most gentle, kind and affectionate. As a christian he was sincere faithful and most exemplary. For a long time he was not only a member but an Elder in the Presbyterian church of Bellefonte, and took an active part in the labors of the sessions, presbyteries, synods and general assemblies. It would take a volume to contain an enumeration of his virtues and his labors, and in this brief notice we shall attempt no further to detail what all who had the benefit of his acquaintance knew so well. He was a man with no vices, and as few of the imperfections incident to human nature as is ever found in our race.

Mr. McAllister was twice married—first to Henrietta Osman Orbeson, of Huntingdon, Pa., by whom he had seven children, four of whom died in infancy, and one Ellen E., a lovely daughter died in 1866 at the age of twenty Two daughters, Mary A., the wife of Gen. Jas. A. Beaver, and Sarah B., wife of Dr. Thomas R. Hays, both of Bellefonte, survive their father The first Mrs. McAllister died April 12, 1857, and on September 12, 1859, Mr. McAllister married Margaret Hamilton of Harrisburg, a granddaughter of Capt. John Hamilton, under whom his grandfather served in the revolution. By this second marriage Mr. McAllister had no children. He leaves his widow to mourn her irreparable loss.

It will doubtless be generations before another citizen will die whose loss will be so deeply and universally felt, and whose place in public and private stations it will be so impossible to fill.
